

QUAY QUOTES

“The industry is concerned that some prime trawling areas, areas that have been trawled for 100 years or more, are going to be set aside as a MPA,” says Roy Bross, secretary of the Deep-Sea Trawling Industry Association on page 12.

“We had to convince them that when they came to us they had no skills whatsoever, but that as and when they do leave us they will be able to get a job in any boatyard anywhere,” says Leon Scheepers of TAG Yachts on page 16.

“In the face of adversity, we need to march forward aggressively,” says Prasheen Maharaj, chief financial officer of Southern African Shipyards on page 19.

“The benefits of successfully implementing an integrative, collaborative ecosystem management outweigh the short-term difficulties associated with such efforts,” explains Dr Samantha Petersen, manager of WWF South Africa’s Sustainable Fisheries Programme on page 37.

“The expansion of our bunker barge business into Europe supports our strategy of expansion into international and niche market sectors,” said Laurence Stuart-Hill, executive director of Grindrod Limited on page 40.

“It (aquaculture) has the potential to increase our fish stocks and also create the much needed jobs and entrepreneurial opportunities for traditional fishing coastal communities.” minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries, Tina Joemat-Peterson page 42.

“The decision to de-list the species appears to have been due to South Africa’s inability to address serious shortcomings in its implementation of the listing,” says Markus Burgener, Senior Programme Officer for TRAFFIC, on page 42.

“Seafood from our oceans is a finite resource and care has to be taken if we want to ensure long term sustainability. Companies cannot pay lip service to this process as it changes the modus operandi of an organisation completely,” says Roelof Brink, director of Fish on Line about sustainability in the fishing sector on page 45.

“We found in their possession photographs taken wearing the officer’s clothes and in possession of considerable sums of money, which is unusual for stowaways. One of the stowaways had a letter from a crewmember stating how much he would miss her,” writes Mike Heads on page 41.

Refer to the pages indicated for full information on these interesting quotes.